PREFACE

To hold aloft
the light of truth and freedom and to guard the friendship of Hellas and Hesperia forever

On two tablets of bronze, one in English, one in Greek, in the vestibule of the Gennadeion in Athens is written the brief account of the founding and purpose of the building and of the library housed within it The closing words of the account are quoted above, and sum up the ideal of the founder and donor of the library, Joannes Gennadius For this gem among collections of books, though small, is unique among the other libraries of Europe, in that it was devoted by its donor to a national ideal, presented for public use as it was, "the only existing rich and specially organized collection of the rare and less known records of the mediaeval and modern periods of Greek history and literature "[1]

Since this is the first attempt to publish a catalogue of any part of the Gennadius collection, it is fitting in this place to give an account of the founder and a description, in condensed form, of the scope and contents of the library

Joannes Gennadius (1844–1932) was a distinguished and learned Greek who spent forty years of his long life in the diplomatic service of his country in England His father, George Gennadius, played a notable part in the Greek War of Independence and the strenuous times that followed, and was a professor in the University of Athens, both of which circumstances in Greece entitle one to the highest honor The son imbibed from his father an intense patriotism and a love of books, which found fruition in the collection and the library which is a memorial to him Joannes Gennadius was a delegate to the Disarmament Conference in Washington in 1922, and at that time made the offer of his library to the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, on condition that a building be provided for it,

[1] Margaret Burton and Arundell Esdaile, Famous Libraries of the World, London, 1937, p xiv

and funds be supplied for its proper upkeep The offer was accepted by the Trustees of the School, land was donated for the purpose by the Greek Government, and the Carnegie Corporation undertook to provide the building, which was formally dedicated in 1926 It is of white marble of classic design, and stands against a background of pine woods on the slope of Mt Lykabettos

Gennadius had spent much time in preparing typewritten catalogues of the various sections of the library In the Deed of Gift he stipulated that "as soon as practicable a subject catalogue of the library be published on the same principle of classification as the sections already catalogued by the Donor " The present catalogue is the first step towards the fulfilment of the condition, and, it is expected, will be followed by catalogues of other sections of the library In the preparation of this volume, the typewritten catalogue has been constantly consulted, but the title-pages of the books themselves have been the ultimate authority, and the notes are entirely the work of the editor The aim has been to make the book useful as a sort of topographical index for places visited during the nineteenth century, though it has been impossible to cover the ground thoroughly for reasons of space

The library now numbers about 55,000 titles which are constantly being increased by gift and purchase It is highly specialized, being concerned with books, pictures, maps, etc , relating to Greece, the Near East, the Balkans, and their fringes, from the earliest times to the present The following is a description of the contents of the library, according to the somewhat outmoded classification, by sections, as Gennadius left it

1 GREEK CLASSICS From the point of view of the bibliophile this section is the most interesting It contains twenty-seven incunabula, about 150 first editions, many rare association items and beautiful bindings Since 1932 few purchases have been made for this section, in order to avoid duplication with books in the near-by libraries of the Archaeological schools Gifts for the section, however, are accepted

2 GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL This is a rich and interesting section containing travels in the Near East from the earliest times to the present, as well as topographical descriptions, maps, charts, portolans, etc The present volume represents a small portion of the section

3 ARCHAEOLOGY, Classical, Early Christian and Byzantine Though the classical portion of this section is no longer added to, it contains a large collection of reprints, dissertations, treatises, etc on ancient archaeology, bound together, indexed, and conveniently accessible, and not easily to be found elsewhere

4 BYZANTINE HISTORY AND LITERATURE When Gennadius gave the library, this section was small and unimportant, and no catalogue had been made for it By the purchase in 1935 of the important library of Professor Gerland of Leipzig, it was brought up to its present state of completeness With the Benaki, Loverdos and Byzantine Museums near by, the important manuscript collection in the National Library, and the various Byzantine churches in Greece, the Gennadeion forms a center for Byzantine studies unequalled in the world

5 MODERN GREEK LITERATURE Included in this section are many rare items from early Greek presses in Crete, Smyrna, Syra, Nauplia, Athens, etc , as well as a valuable collection of modern Greek poetry from 1824 onward

6 PERIODICALS In addition to the periodicals pertaining to the other sections, Classical, Byzantine, Archaeological, etc , there are many old and rare periodicals issued in Greek outside of Greece during the Revolution and the early years of the new state A rare collector's item is a collection of 750 different newspapers representing nearly every paper issued in Greece and by Greeks abroad from 1840 to 1890

7 KORAIS (CORAY) This is an almost complete collection of the works of the intellectual leader of the movement for Greek independence Gennadius' catalogue of this section is a mine of rare information, and deserves publication at an early date

8 MODERN GREEK HISTORY The richest part of this collection is that devoted to the Greek War of Independence It also contains a large collection of pamphlets and fugitive pieces, impossible to locate elsewhere, on 19th century Greek history

9 TURKISH HISTORY This section is fairly complete Closely allied to it, is a part of the section of Archaeology devoted to Turkish costumes, original sketches made in Turkey during the 16th and 17th centuries

10 THEOLOGY Indispensable to the student of Byzantine history is the section on theology, the two subjects being inextricably entwined There are about 300 editions of the Bible in Greek and other languages

11 BYRON There is a highly specialized collection of first editions, letters, commentary, and other Byroniana, and many relics of the great Philhellene

12 GREEK LANGUAGE Included in this grammatical section are most of the early printed grammars that followed the arrival of the Byzantine humanists in Italy and accelerated the progress of the Renaissance there Laskaris, Chalkokondyles, Chrysoloras and others The Epitome of Laskaris, Milan, 1476, the first book to be printed entirely in Greek, is to be found here

13 PRONUNCIATION Gennadius carried on constant warfare with the proponents of the Erasmian pronunciation of ancient Greek, an argument that is still kept alive in Greece Practically all the literature on both sides of the subject is to be found in the Gennadeion

14 MUSIC All of the important publications on Byzantine and modern Greek music are to be found in this section

15 NATURAL HISTORY This is a miscellaneous collection of works on the products of Greece, birds, flowers, minerals, volcanoes, etc There is a complete collection of material on the famous lawsuits involving the Laurion mines in 1871 No effort has been made to create any specialized sections in science, as chemistry, physics, mathematics, medicine, etc , in the library, but there are many books on the history of the sciences

16 ANDROUTSOS By the gift of the late Chrestos Androutsos a collection of works on philosophy and religion is kept together in a separate room

17 MANUSCRIPTS There is a small collection of illuminated Arabic and Greek manuscripts Recent additions are a gospel of 1226 and two liturgical manuscripts of later date, the gift of Mme Helène Stathatou of Athens Very important also are several manuscripts written by travelers in Greece during the 18th century There is, besides, a large collection of letters, clippings, pictures, most of them in scrapbooks, covering the history and geography of Greece

Unique items are the following the first edition of the Erotokritos, a Cretan tragedy by Kornaros, Venice, 1713, the only known copy of the Rodolinos, a Cretan tragedy by Joannes Andreas Troilos, Venice, 1647, a number of collections of sketches of Greek and Turkish costumes, already mentioned, a collection of over 120 sepia sketches by William Haygarth of Greek scenes and costumes, made about 1810, a collection of 202 water-color sketches made during several visits from 1848 to 1864 by the celebrated landscape-painter and writer of nonsense-verse, Edward Lear, (1812–1888), a collection of 75 water-color paintings of the flowers of Corfu, made about 1826 to the order of Lord Guilford, the founder of the Ionian Academy, by Luigi Scala. Another rare item is the collection of original sketches of the Greek War of Independence made about 1837 to the order of General Joannes Makryiannis by a Greek artist, Panayiotis Zographos, only one other complete set of this is known, it is in the Royal Library at Windsor. There is also a collection of war maps made about 1705 for Francesco Morosini, Strategos of the Morea, representing plans of the castles in the Peloponnesos held by the Venetians at that time. These are being studied and prepared for publication.

In conclusion, I quote a few sentences from the closing paragraph of an article by William Miller in the Journal of Modern History, II, 1930, p. 628: "The shelves of the Gennadeion express the unity of Greek history, which ended with neither the Macedonian nor the Roman, nor even the Frankish and Turkish conquests. . . . To devote exclusive study to the classical age is as if students of English history occupied themselves wholly with the reign of Elizabeth, or American scholars entirely with the career of Washington. . . . The idea, derived from excessive concentration on antiquity from the distant standpoint of a foreign scholar's study that the ancient Greeks were demigods, and the moderns degenerates, has happily been exploded, and could never have been true to human nature. In the Gennadeion both alike have their resting-place, with the appropriate motto engraved above the entrance: 'Those are called Greeks who share our culture.'"

In the catalogue below, the works of the travelers are arranged chronologically by date of publication, and within that date alphabetically by name of author. In the case of books published several years after the journey described, cross-references have been made in the notes. Chronological arrangement by the date of the journey seemed impossible because of the frequent reluctance of travelers to give dates, and because journeys often extend over a period of several years. Topographical arrangement was also impossible, because travel routes do not always follow a uniform pattern. Here, it is expected that the topographical index will be of use. Gennadius' catalogue, which is inconsistent and whimsical in its arrangement, had to be left out of consideration.

No attempt has been made to make this book an authority on the spelling of place-names. The most generally known form has been chosen for the lemma in the index, and cross-references are frequently made from the less well-known forms. Most writers up to the middle of the last century used the forms Napoli di Romania, Tripolitza,

Salona and Vostitza, where now are used Nauplia, Tripolis, Amphissa and Aigion In Asia Minor and Syria the ancient classical forms are found alongside or instead of the Arabic or Turkish words It has not been thought feasible or useful to attempt to use the modern Turkish spelling of place-names Nor in the case of Greek names was it possible to use the modern spellings, such as are found in the gazeteers, for example, Athinai, Thivai, Epithavro, Levsina, where the well-known form was taken for the index

In the topographical notes that follow the entries, the arrangement of places usually, if possible, follows the route taken, omitting such places as are given slight notice, or islands that are viewed only from the sea Only names of those persons of importance that were actually met by the traveler are mentioned

The nineteenth century travelers moved in an age of stirring events Napoleon's wars and the pre-revolutionary period in Greece, the revolution in Greece and Turkey, the early days of Otho's Bavarian court, the Crimean war, the cession of Corfu, and the developments in Egypt, Cyprus and Palestine each provoked interest and a flood of travelers The first organised cruise of Mediterranean sightseers is described in Nos 97 and 230 The conditions experienced by the travelers in the nineteenth century have long since passed long delays in quarantine or changes in travel-routes necessitated by the outbreak of a plague in a crowded port, organization of camel caravans to cross deserts or stretches haunted by robbers, slow and stormy journeys over the sea, and frequent shipwrecks, – all these are now things of the distant past, and it is doubtful whether we shall ever have again such romantic though often painful episodes in travel

In the section of the library given to the history of the Greek War of Independence, there are the descriptions of Greece by adventurous souls like Leicester Stanhope, Samuel G Howe, Emerson and others, who visited the country and narrated the events of the war Such accounts belong to the field of history rather than travel and will appear in another catalogue on the War of Independence, an extremely rich and important section

This, then, is a catalogue unique in that it is occupied with the contents of a single library in a definite field, and it is hoped by the compiler that, in addition to making a beginning of fulfilment of the wishes of the Donor of the library, it will be of some assistance to those interested in research in the travelers of the last century
